Most of Thai people especially baby boomer are still conservative people, they tend to not accept changes as the time had change. I think that LGBTI community have to prove themselves to be accepted in the society, so they are more likely to be talented and be succeeded in their career paths. They have to work harder due to the exploitation and discrimination at work.

Therefore, they are one of the movement of Thai economy to move forward and increase the GDP growth. However, If the majority of Thai society still not accept them as "people", Thailand will stuck in developing country.

The government should launch the practical and effective policy to support them. For instance, approving the same-sex marriage law in order to allow them entering more in the market and have the chance to pay tax equally (Marriage tax).

Nevertheless, in fact, people should treat LGBTI community as a human being that they have right and ability as the same as other people.
