In our societies, there are false beliefs about LGBTQ people. In reality, people pretended to support LGBTQ people. They are nothing more than window dressing. For example, most parents would not accept their own child who was raised by their own hands if one of their family members has a different gender than their actual sex. As a result, LGBTQ people were impacted by their workplaces and societies. Despite the fact that some LGBTQ people outperform real men and women in the workplace, they are still discriminated against and treated differently. As a result, they are unable to work to their full potential, which is detrimental to the economy. This inequality occurred, affecting the productivity of LGBTQ workers. The government will have to step in.

The governments should prevented and combated discrimination on the basis of gender identity or sexual orientation, enabling all qualified humans to serve their citizens, ensuring their people from unfair treatment on the basis of gender, such as sexual preference, freedom, uniqueness, fairness, acceptance, and accessibility in their job role .Then consider more about LGBTQ equality. Financial policies should also be implemented. For example, some campaigns or funds have been established to assist LGBTQ people with living standards, education, career paths, and amenities, among other things. With the government's support, LGBTQ people with great potential will result in higher productivity and outcomes, which will be capable of lifting up the entire country and raise their economy.
