

- 1 Most sinners are not murderers, since most people punished in the next life are nonmurderers, and sinners are punished in the next life.
- 2 Those who ignore relevant facts are likely to be mistaken. So the wise are not likely to be mistaken, because they take all known relevant facts into account.
- 3 All logic classes are extremely interesting. So some classes that are harder than average are extremely interesting, since some logic classes are harder than average.
- 4 All classes that are either interesting or difficult are uncrowded, because all uncrowded classes are unexciting, and all interesting or difficult ones are exciting.
- 5 Because Harry enjoys himself only when he has lots of money and because Harry always enjoys going out with Jane, it follows that Harry goes out with Jane only when he has lots of money.
- 6 Some who live by the pen are called liars, and some are called sages. So there are people said to have great sagacity who have been referred to as frequent stretchers of the truth.
- 7 We'll always have death and taxes. Right? And nobody ever gave in to either without a fight. Right? So that's why we're always fighting, fighting, fighting. Right!
