

B.E. Dress Code Policy: No Sandals or Short Pants in any Classroom

We firmly believe that students should enjoy freedom with responsibility. The Faculty of Economics, Thammasat University does not require students to wear uniforms in everyday classes. We do ask students to dress politely, so that they may understand what is appropriate. In the long run, this develops maturity and mutual respect.

Most students understand this policy and comply with the stated dress code. Faculty members, parents, and others are pleased that B.E. students dress appropriately. Yet a small minority of students fail to comply with our dress code policy, although it is clearly stated, as well as the penalties for violation.

Recently, students with the following ID numbers failed to comply with the aforementioned agreement:

This will serve as final notice. If a student fails again to comply with the rules, the B.E. International Program reserves the right to withdraw services and facilities, including but not limited to:

- request forms for any purposes.
- request for a delayed payment.
- letters provided by the B.E. International Program.
- letters of recommendation from student advisors.
- applications for teaching assistantships.
- participation in internships.
- participation in student exchange programs

As a further step, meetings with parents will be required.

Thanks for your attention and cooperation.
